
Cell phone jammer with prescheduled time duration

RF section:

This is the most important part of the jammer, since the output of this section will be interfacing with the mobile. The RF-section consists of three main parts: voltage controlled oscillator VCO, power amplifier and antenna. The voltage controlled oscillator (VCO) is the heart of the RF-section. It is the device that generates the RF signal which will interfere with the cell phone. The output of the VCO has a frequency which is proportional to the input voltage, thus, we can control the output frequency by changing the input voltage. When the input voltage is DC, the output is a specific frequency, while if the input is a triangular waveform, the output will span a specific frequency range. In our design, we need to find a VCO for GSM 900 and GSM 1800. There are three selection criteria for selecting a VCO for this application. Most importantly, it should cover the bands that we need, secondly, it should be readily available at low cost, and finally, it should run at low power consumption. Moreover, we need to minimize the size of GSM-jammer. So, we started to search through the internet for VCO's that work for GSM 900 & GSM 1800 bands.

Finally, we found the following VCO IC's:-

CVCO55BE; this is for GSM 1800. The output frequency is 1785-1900 MHz and the output power is up to 5 dBm.

CVCO55CL; this is for GSM 900. The output frequency is 925-970 MHz and the output power is up to 8 dBm.

We chose these IC's for the following reasons:-

[A] Surface mount, which reduces the size of product.

[B] Having large output power that reduces the number of amplification stages that we need.

[C] Having same value of power supply which is typically equal to 5 volt.
